DRAFT

Members Absent: None.

Staff Present: Terri Byers, Maeve Clark, Susan Craig, Kara Logsden, Anne Mangano, Patty McCarthy, Elyse Miller, Jason Paulios.

Guests Present: None.

Call Meeting to Order. President Paetzold called the meeting to order at 5:00 pm.

Public Discussion. Paulios formally thanked the Board for having staff representation on the Committee and said it has been a pleasure to begin this work. Board members went around the table and introduced themselves to Wes Beary, our new Board member.

Approval of Minutes.

The minutes of the August 23, 2018 Regular Meeting of the Library Board of Trustees were reviewed. A motion to approve the Regular Minutes was made by Kirsch and seconded by Forkenbrock. Motion carried 8/0.

Items for Discussion/Action.

FY18 Financial Reports. Craig said the City closed its FY18 books which enabled us to provide these reports. Craig believes the reports help us get a better sense for the operating budget and provide perspective as we prepare the FY20 budget. Craig briefly described the library accounts and how they operate.

FY20 Budget Request. The City pays for permanent employees and they calculate this expense last. Therefore, the actual library bottom line is not known because we do not enter the biggest part of our budget when we prepare to submit it to the City. Semel asked about staffing levels vis a vis the gig economy. Craig says staffing at the library stays fairly even. She believes we have done a good job making a case to the City and the community that we need the personnel we have. Craig believes we have a good ratio of hourly to permanent staff. In contrast to some other libraries that have had huge budget cuts where basic operations are provided by hourly staff. She believes staffing is reflected in the service we provide. Freeman asked if the library feels threatened; Craig said in the 80s we needed staff very badly and the approval we received at that time for increased staffing has made all the difference and continues to do so. Kirsch asked about permanent/part-time staffing. Craig explained that a budgeted position authorized by the Iowa City City Council for 20 or more hours per week, is a permanent, part-time position and it is entitled to receive benefits. Our temporary staff is not seasonal, unlike other departments like Parks & Recreation which use many people in the summer, for example.

The proposal to eliminate fines on children's and young adult materials was discussed last year but it was not proposed as a budget item at that time, especially with the acquisition of the Bookmobile and other factors. The City's focus on equity and the Library's Equity Tool kit initiative means this is a good time to bring this forward because we believe fines are an issue of equity, not money. The proposed elimination of fines follows the material, not the library card; so young adult materials and children's materials are the only materials that will not accrue fines. Paetzold said we currently do this for materials on the bookmobile. Logsden said there has been a tremendous impact on access to materials on the bookmobile. Craig said the trend for fines is downward overall because of electronic materials, the ease with which people can renew materials, and email reminders. Logsden said if an item is not returned after a period of time, it is considered lost, and will be billed. When the bill is issued, a stop is placed on the card, and checkouts are not permitted. The person will still have to pay for lost items. Semel asked if this has worked with adult materials. Logsden said other libraries have done this successfully. Billing timing depends on the circulation period of the item, said Logsden in response to a question from Forkenbrock. An item with a three-week checkout period would be billed six weeks after it was checked out and not returned, with a maximum fine of $7.50 for a 21 day item. Under the proposal, if returned, the fine would not be added for children's and young adult materials.

Craig thinks circulation will go up for children's materials. Paetzold said we could look at how eliminating fines impacts the collection in one year. Beasley would like this to happen. There is a revenue consequence to waiving fines; Beasley said if everyone returned their materials on time then there would be no fine revenue at all. Logsden said fines are a deterrent because some parents don't get a library card because they are afraid of fines. Logsden said she now believes fines are a barrier to access, which is different from what she thought when she first began working with the circulation of materials. Beary asked how many people can use the hearing augmentation devices; 10 people was the answer. Washington believes the revenue the library receives from fines is a lot of money; Baker agrees but wants to eliminate fines on children's and young adult materials for a year to see how it plays out. Semel does not want to pay attention to fines as a revenue stream. Freeman says the library is more than a book deliverer, for which fines are irrelevant. She believes fines are a feature of the old library. Kirsch said since circulation is down, this may actually increase circulation. Freeman asked if there could be a way to let future donors know that this is a potential area for support. Kirsch asked when we would implement the new fine policy. Craig said if the City approves our budget and Council approves, then we could begin the no fines on children's and young adult materials in June 2019, just in time for summer. A motion to approve the proposed FY20 budget request was made by Beasley, and seconded by Kirsch. Motion carried 9/0. It is stipulated there will be an analysis one year after of the elimination of fines for children's and young adult materials and how it affects circulation.

Staff Reports.

Director's Report. The Iowa City Book Festival program of events is available. Most of the events are in Iowa City; the Engle Prize award ceremony takes place on October 4 at Coralville Public Library. ICPL is part of the Gallery Walk on the Friday night of the festival, October 5. The Hazel Westgate collection will be on display after being reframed and receiving archival matting. The collection has been refreshed and rehung thanks to gifts to the library. There will be cookies and cider.

Departmental Reports:

Adult Services. No comments. Clark explained the graphs represented people enrolled in Summer Reading and people who completed the program. Increases were noted to both adult and teen participation.

Community & Access Services. No comments.

Development Office Report. McCarthy encouraged people to celebrate the Book End's 20th birthday and take a look at the birthday cake outside The Book End. The Community Foundation of Johnson County awarded the library a grant we will use for discovery kits. McCarthy stated the donation form included in the last Window has already brought in $2,700.

Spotlight on the Collection. No comments.

Miscellaneous. No comments.

RE: Channel 20 Background

The Library Channel was created to provide equal access to Library programming to those who were not able to come to the Library building. It was first established officially in 1981, with planning having begun several years prior. Mediacom customers in lowa City (and some in other parts of Johnson County, including University Heights and Coralville) get the Library Channel as part of their cable package.

In 1999, we began using automated playback allowing for programming without human intervention. In 2003, we converted programming from VHS to DVD. In 2006-2007, Library programs were uploaded to a digital format for the first time. In 2009, we began sharing programs online. At that time we used our own in-house server to distribute content. We now also live stream programs directly from Meeting Room A and the Storytime Room.

As more users began finding our content online, we explored solutions that would meet the needs of our patrons. We now circulate our online content via Youtube, which works well for mobile and Smart TV users on a wide range of devices, and we embed these videos to our recently refreshed video site located at www.ic.pl.org/video.. When patrons ask how they can view Library content, we find that they are more interested in our online options than the channel. Our current Library Channel staff note that in the past patrons have asked to have DVD copies made of programs. Now we also offer them the link to the online version and patrons nearly always prefer that option over a DVD.

Library staff have been teaching classes at the Senior Center on how to "Cut the Cord" on their cable packages, and they've had high rates of attendance. While Mediacom has never provided us with any specific numbers on who is watching the Library Channel, we understand anecdotally that those numbers have been going down and will continue to do so.

While we have been anticipating changes to our delivery model for several years, we don't anticipate any changes in producing quality local video content to share with our patrons. We wish to meet our patrons' needs, and that entails delivering content in a way that patrons are able to use simply on the devices they already own.

With fewer people viewing the Mediacom channel and the overhead costs to maintain the Channel operations, an FY19 Strategic Plan initiative calls for ending broadcasting on the Mediacom channel. Planning for phase-out has begun. Right now we are planning for at April, 2019 as a likely end date.

Staffing

The Children's Department has welcomed our new Intern, Alicia Henle. Alicia is in her second year at the University of lowa's School of Library Science. We also have a new hourly program aide, Phuc Le. Phuc is attending the University of lowa. Our previous aide, Carolina left due to graduation, and we wish her the best. We are happy to have both join our Children's Services staff!

Conferences

About a year ago I submitted a proposal to speak at the Association for Library Services to Children (ALSC) National Institute. My presentation on our Special Access programming that we do here at the library with the lowa City Autism Community was selected and on September 28 & 29, I along with Erin Silva of the North Liberty Community Library presented to nearly 300 youth serving librarians from across the US about our inclusive programming. The 3 day conference was by far one of the best that I have attended as a librarian. Many of the topics focused on advocacy and inclusion and how to make our libraries more welcoming to our entire community.

I also attended the lowa Library Association (ILA) annual conference in early October. I had the opportunity this year to sit on the Planning Committee, meaning I spent the entire last year planning for the two and a half day conference. I enjoyed our Keynote speaker for the conference, PC Sweeny, the Political Director of EveryLibrary. He is in charge of helping dozens of libraries with local library funding initiatives either as a direct political action or a ballot campaign. He spoke about how libraries need to make sure we know who are supporters are and then start framing the library in terms of the issues that people care about.

Programs

We have had several great programs so far this fall in the Children's Room.

The Halloween Costume Exchange created a lot of buzz and had around 65 attendees receiving gently used new to them costumes for the upcoming trick or treating night. I think this was a wonderful idea and helped fill a need for some of our patrons who couldn't afford a brand new store bought costume.

After a successful run this summer, we had a repeat of our Tween Harry Potter Escape Room. We filled all available slots once again and have had many requests to run the program for adults.

Hazel Westgate Re-Dedication

On October 5th, we participated in the Downtown District's, Gallery Walk showcasing our Hazel Westgate collection of original artwork from children's books. We were very fortunate to welcome two new pieces this year to our collection from local children's illustrators, Jennifer Black Reinhardt and Claudia McGehee (pictured below with their art for the collection). It is my hope, along with Children's Librarian, Casey Maynard, to continue Hazel's efforts and expand our collection.

Westgate Collection of Original Children's Book Art Returns

After a year's hiatus, the Westgate Collection of Original Children's Book Art returned to the Children's Room this month. The Westgate Collection, 60 pieces of original children's book art, was the work of Hazel Westgate, a children's librarian at Iowa City from 1949 to 1988. She started collecting the art in 1964, soliciting pieces from well-known illustrators for the newly renovated story hour room in the Carnegie building. The collection ranges from prominent illustrators Charles Schulz and Dr. Seuss, to local favorites Ellie Simmons and Cynthia Jabar. For the collection's grand reopening (October 5th), Claudia McGehee and Jennifer Black Reinhardt generously donated new pieces.

Over the past year, our staff cataloged each piece of art, assessed its condition, digitized it, and worked with Blick Art to have elements of the frame replaced to conform to current preservation standards, such as UV plexi-glass, archival matting, and new back boards. We completely reframed a small number of illustrations to accommodate new matting. In addition to addressing the condition, we also designed a new brochure for the collection and created new labels for each piece. We are also working to purchase the books that the art was original created for, many of the titles out of print, so we can have these books in our collection. Only one piece has yet to make it home. Petunia, a goose by Roger Duvoisin is currently at an art conservationist for repairs to the tempera paint. It is slated to return to the library in November.

If you would like to explore the Westgate Collection from home, visit our digital exhibit at www.icpl.org/westgate. One of the great benefits of the site is the ability to zoom in close on each piece, so you can see individual brush marks and pen strokes, as well as the materials used to create the artwork. It complements the physical collection, allowing you interact with the art (up close) in a way that you cannot in the building. The digital collection is also available on our esigns in the building and highlights our staff's favorite illustrations.

INFORMATION TECHNOLOGY REPORT TO LIBRARY BOARD (October, 2018) Brent Palmer, IT Coordinator

Streaming Video Content

While preparing for the sunset of the Library's public access channel, it might be helpful to understand the alternatives to the channel for delivering video content to our patrons. We currently offer streaming video through our own website at http://www.icpl.org/video. The videos themselves are hosted at YouTube but are embedded in our own webpage. Patrons can also stream videos straight from the YouTube website. By having both options, users can discover the content by searching either one.

The Library Channel's new logo

Another option that we have discussed is providing the City Channel with some content. This would be a way to continue to offer our some of our videos via a public access channel. Members of the City Channel seem open to this although we don't have specific plans at this time.

We also have the capacity to stream content live through YouTube. We do this occasionally now for some programs. This would be especially useful for events that we know will be extremely popular such as a visit by a political candidate or a reading by an author. The City sometimes streams its programs (such as City Council meetings) live through Facebook. We have discussed this as a possibility for the future.

All of these options are free to everyone and do not require a subscription to cable TV. All of the programs can be watched at any time, not just when they are being broadcasted. However, those who don't have a broadband Internet connection at home might have a more difficult time streaming video. One downside of not using the Channel to distribute video is that certain programs can't be streamed because of copyright restrictions. Examples include any content that shows a book or uses commercial songs (e.g. many of our storytime programs). Some speakers or performers have opted to give us permission to air their performance on the cable channel, but not on the Internet.

Disposing of Computer Equipment

When we decommission IT equipment, there are a number of ways we dispose of it. Our options for getting rid of this equipment is laid out in the Library Finance Policy. First choice is to give it to another city department. In practice, this rarely happens for IT equipment. The City of Iowa City IT department maintains the equipment for other departments and would generally not need any of our used equipment. But it has happened on occasion. We also can donate equipment to a non-profit organization.

The second choice depends on whether the equipment is valued at less than $500. If so, the director has several options: sell it outright, give it to the Friends Foundation to sell or put it up for bid. We have sold a few things to buyers outright (for example, we recently sold some "early-learning" computers to local libraries). If the value is more than $500, then we are obligated to try and auction it off. This is what we do more often than not, regardless of the value. It can be really difficult to know how much anything will go for. Sometimes it is much less than we think. Other times it ends up going for much more.

When equipment is auctioned off, we put it up for bid on a site called GovDeals.com. Managing the auctions on GovDeals is handled by the City's Purchasing department. It is always interesting to find out who is buying this equipment and how they use it. In one case, a battery backup unit which probably weighed more than 600 lbs. was being shipped to Ghana to be used in a photomat shop managed by the buyer's uncle. In another case, somebody bought a switch so that he could use it to study for his networking certification exam. But most often, they are bought to be resold on someplace like EBay.

Finally, if we feel the equipment is either broken or just too old to be useful to anyone, our maintenance department will take the equipment to be recycled, which currently is Goodwill.

Fall into a Great Book

Anne Mangano, Collection Services Coordinator, Iowa City Public Library

I love fall. It means the return of crisp mornings, sweaters, and thick socks with boots. It means apple cider donuts, vegetable stews, and warm drinks. I love being surrounded by the array of colors of the leaves and I even like raking them once they've fallen to the ground. But most of all, fall means new books. And this fall, the lowa City Public Library has a great new selection of fiction for you to enjoy.

If you are in the mood for something lyrical with a great sense of place and character, look no further than Frances de Pontes Peebles' "The Air You Breathe." Set in Brazil in the first half of the 20th Century, Dores and Graça grow up on different social rungs of the same sugar plantation. It is their love of samba that brings them together. They run away to Lapa and develop an act, but it is apparent that it is Graça that everyone wants to hear on stage. The novel is told from Dores' point of view as she struggles with being forced in the shadow of Graça's fame, while trying to find her own voice. Other great historical fiction picks are Therese Anne Fowler's "A Well-Behaved Woman," Kate Atkinson's "Transcription," and Wayetu Moore's "She Would Be King."

Another story of unlikely friendship is Esi Edugyan's "Washington Black." Shortlisted for the Man Booker Prize, Edugyan's novel follows an eleven-year-old boy, George Washington Black, who has an intelligent, curious mind, but enslaved on a Barbados sugar plantation in the 1830s. Christopher Wilde, the brother of the plantation's master, is drawn to his brilliance, using him to assist in the testing of a flying machine. Wilde recognizes that the only way to allow Washington's mind to flourish is to escape to Canada. But this is Washington's story and this journey is only the first step towards discovering who he is and his place in this world. Other long-awaited new novels include Markus Zusak's "Bridge of Clay," Barbara Kingsolver's "Unsheltered," Liane Moriarty's "Nine Prefect Strangers."

In "Bitter Orange," Claire Fuller offers a dark, mysterious look at a relationship that isn't what it seems. Frances Jellico, researching an old English country estate, realizes she can see through the floor into the rooms below the attic she inhabits. She is drawn to the peephole, watching the couple, Cara and Peter, living a privileged, lavish life Frances could only hope for. She befriends the couple — having dinner with them, walking the grounds, hearing their stories. But their stories do not add up to what is seen through the floor. If you're in for more thrills, try Sarah Perry's "Melmoth" or Lisa Gabriele's "The Winters;" her modern take on Daphne du Maurier's "Rebecca."

What could be better reads for a crisp October evening? These are only a few of the new titles available at the Iowa City Public Library. Find these and other great books at catalog.icpl.org.

By Jason Paulios, Senior Librarian of Adult Services

A few new nonfiction works have arrived at the Iowa City Public Library that both celebrate our planet's wild areas and warn us of the dangers of climate change and misuse of the land.

"Gunflint Burning: Fire in the Boundary Waters" is Cary J. Griffith's account of the 2007 Ham Lake fire that, over two weeks, burned 75,000 acres of woodlands in northern Minnesota and into Canada. Griffith opens with the fire raging towards an inhabited area of northwood cabins, a local Deputy tries to persuade a resourceful 76-year-old area resident to follow the mandatory evacuation. The story is told chronologically and from many points of view, Griffith introduces us to a variety of people involved in the fire and it's plain to see that he was thorough in his search for firsthand accounts. Over the following chapters Griffith introduces us to the camper whose fire started the blaze, resort and homeowners in the area, police and fire personnel, as well as scientists that detail the natural and climatic conditions that led to it burning so widely. His descriptions of the area's natural history help to explain how this fire got out of hand so quickly. Those with a strong connection to the area that "Gunflint Burning" covers can attest that Griffith was able to capture the sights and sounds that make canoe trips in the Boundary Waters so special.

Carlos Magdalena's "The Plant Messiah: Adventures in Search of the World's Rarest Species", is comprised of autobiographical stories of his work as Tropical Senior Botanical Horticulturist for the Royal Botanic Gardens at Kew, England. Carlos describes coming from a family that encouraged exploration, as well as respect and caretaking for the plants and animals of Asturias in Northern Spain. When wanderlust overtook him at 28, he travelled to London where a trip to the Royal Botanic Gardens of Kew changed his world. Their efforts to save highly endangered plants mirrored his passion for caring for the land back in Asturias. He has an energetic, driven personality that comes through in the descriptions of his intense Kew education in the greenhouses and beyond. Most of the book recounts his journeys to save seeds or cuttings of rare plants found in the islands of the Republic of Mauritius in the Indian Ocean, Amazon backwaters in Peru, and many other far flung locations. He's a great storyteller and has set up each chapter as if he has to solve a puzzle with life or death stakes, how do these exceedingly rare plants produce fruit, seed, and ultimately a new plant? He includes simple overviews of the science behind his a-ha moments, so even if you don't have a botanical background you come away with an understanding for how these mysteries were solved. His passion for plants is infectious and it carries through in his writing, the stories are often zany and move quickly and you're left feeling that we need many more people with the drive and desire of this plant messiah.

The first event of Witching Hour 2018 featured curators from across the country and the community.

— Zak Neumann/Little Village

If you are a devotee of the arts who has ever wondered how the sausage of your favorite festivals, seasons and programs gets made, the opening salvo of the 2018 Witching Hour festival shed a little light on the subject. The panel discussion, facilitated by Coffee with Dan conversationalist Dan Boscaljon, was the perfect kick-off to Witching Hour's weekend of examination of the unknown, the creative process and new work (presented by the Englert Theatre and Little Village).

The panel, one of the top things I was excited for on the bill, featured Wally Chappell, former executive director of Hancher; managing director of Tennessee's Big Ears Festival, Carissa Stolting; and Simeon Talley, founder of Iowa City's Flyover and Middle of Nowhere festivals.

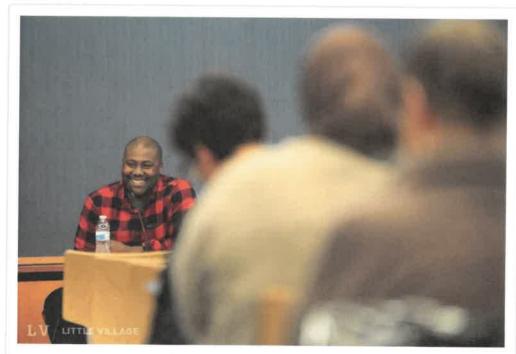

It set the stage perfectly for Witching Hour, a festival that asks, "Why?" more often than it presents answers. The conversation was a microcosm of Witching Hour conceptual touchstones.

Boscaljon began by speaking with each panelist individually, and the line of questioning frequently came back to community. The ways in which a curator can both serve and build community through their choices are clear, and that responsibility was not lost on any of the panelists.

"That's to me where the heartbeat of the community is," said Chappell. "In the box office."

Stolting spoke to the power of place in building a festival, and the way that the relatively isolated city of Knoxville, Tennessee, fosters that sense of community.

"A real family starts to feel like it's being built over the course of the festival weekend," she said, drawing good-natured ribbing from the audience for referring to Knoxville — approximately 2.5-times the size of Iowa City — as small.

The conversation with Talley, however, really began to crack open what curation can mean to a community. He spoke of the value and risks of representation. In the wake of his most recent Flyover Fest, for example, which programmed primarily people of color, he had white community members approach him to express feeling of alienation, a story which drew an audible reaction of discomfort from the audience.

Managing feedback is an ongoing concern for curators, one that Talley feels especially keenly, as his festivals are so young.

"Some of the feedback you get, they just don't get what you're trying to do, or this just isn't for them," Talley said, responding to questions of how to know which feedback is valuable and which is just noise. Determining that is as simple as it is difficult: "Have conversations, hear people out and try to navigate it," he said.

Ultimately, it's impossible to always give all people what they want, of course. But Talley had high praise for the Iowa City community, noting that venues such as Hancher and the Englert, along with festivals such as Mission Creek, have cultivated a constituency of arts supporters in town who have learned to take risks and be patrons even to art that they don't understand.

Chappell wrapped up the session, after a brief audience Q&A, with a little etymology: Curator, he said, derives from curare, Latin for "to take care of." It's the same root as cure and curate (in the religious sense). It evokes, he said, "a sense of caring that we cannot afford to lose."

This panel was, again, the perfect start to a delightfully curated Witching Hour festival: a little bit academic, a little bit exploratory, a little bit navel-gazey — and a whole lot of fun. A sense of care was evidenced at every turn during the weekend, and community was foregrounded in every choice.

For Lindsay Amer, bringing a live performance of their popular children's web series to the Brooklyn Public Library made perfect sense.

"I feel like libraries are kind of like the YouTube of the real world," Amer, who uses gender-neutral they/them pronouns, told NBC News. "They're publicly accessible, they have all of this information that's kind of just stock piled there, and anyone can get into it and really dive deep."

Amer is the creator and host of Queer Kid Stuff — a web series on YouTube dedicated to educating children about LGBTQ topics through vlog-style conversations and original songs. In episodes posted online, Amer and their puppet Teddy explore subjects ranging from coming out as nonbinary to

On a recent Saturday, Amer partnered up with the Brooklyn Public Library to perform a live show of Queer Kid Stuff to an audience of children and parents in the youth wing of the library's main branch, where Amer read books and performed songs from the popular web series.

The collaboration was one of the latest examples of a public library partnering up with members of the LGBTQ community to help create more inclusive and welcoming spaces within its library system.

From Brooklyn to Wichita, librarians are helping foster acceptance and understanding through programming aimed at educating both children and adults about diversity, identity and inclusivity

"Librarians in a public, out-of-school setting have the opportunity to create a welcoming space for all the students and families in a community," said Becca Mui, education manager at GLSEN, a national organization focused on ensuring safe and affirming schools for LGBTQ students.

"Librarians themselves can be role models and advocates by using inclusive language, interrupting anti-LGBTQ comments and implementing inclusive programming," Mui added.

"The public library is a cornerstone of democracy, a place where all people are welcome and safe to learn, create, express and explore in ways that better their lives."

Leigh Hurwitz is the outreach librarian at the Brooklyn Public Library and helped plan the recent live show of Queer Kid Stuff.

"We really strive to be a space that welcomes everyone," Hurwitz said. "I want to make sure [the library] is a welcoming space and also an informed space."

Hurwitz said it is important for libraries to both serve as a source of knowledge for the community and to also look to the community for knowledge creation.

"That is part of why we do these programs," Hurwitz explained. "To learn from the community, to have community members talking about their own experiences and sharing resources and information."

Hurwitz added that because libraries tend to be so embedded within neighborhoods, they have the opportunity to provide a welcoming space for young people who may be struggling with their own identity in some way.

"Because [the Brooklyn Public Library] has 60 branches, we really are all over Brooklyn and can really be that affirming space that has good information and stories and programs that are representative of lots of different identities and experiences," Hurwitz continued.

Across the country in Portland, Oregon, on the same day as the event in Brooklyn, drag queen Poison Waters read stories to an audience of nearly 100 children, parents and caregivers for a session of Drag Queen Story Hour hosted by the Multnomah County Library.

Kevin Cook, who has performed as Poison Waters for the past 30 years, first heard about Drag Queen Story Hour on social media after events were held in larger cities.

"It's been an amazing response," Cook said of his own participation. "On social media, people across the country are like, 'This is so cool, we're so glad it's happening in Portland,' and the actual response at the events has been just wonderful."

Cook said he was particularly touched by an encounter he had with a young girl in the audience of a recent Drag Queen Story Hour event outside Portland, in the city of Fairview, Oregon.

"I thought, 'I'm going to be the only person of color here,' and there was this little African-American girl that was just so sweet, and she chatted me up through the whole thing," Cook said.

He said when he left, the girl threw her arms around him and gave him a big hug. "She seemed sad I was leaving, so I was glad I brought some happiness to her," Cook added. "Whether she saw some of herself in me on some level was great."

Katie O'Dell, programming and outreach director for Oregon's Multnomah County Library, said concepts around diversity and inclusion are central to the library's priorities.

"The public library is a cornerstone of democracy, a place where all people are welcome and safe to learn, create, express and explore in ways that better their lives," O'Dell said. "By creating safe and welcoming spaces that honor diversity and inclusion, the public library can honor its traditional mission, while evolving to meet changing needs over time."

O'Dell said librarians work directly with drag performers to select books and related activities that are engaging and developmentally appropriate, and that the Multnomah County Library was compelled to start hosting Drag Queen Story Hour after seeing peer libraries successfully host the program in different parts of the country.

Mari Redington, children's services assistant at the Iowa City Public Library, was also inspired after hearing about Drag Queen Story Hour.

"I'm a huge fan of 'Rupaul's Drag Race,' and constantly thought about how all of the colors, costumes and makeup vital to drag would be so appealing to the preschoolers and toddlers I meet every day," Redington said. "At the same time, I kept coming across some wonderful LGBTQ+ positive picture books."

After connecting with members of the drag community in Iowa City, the Iowa City Public Library implemented its own version of Drag Queen Story Hour this past summer.

"I wanted to schedule our Drag Family Storytime in June, because it was the first year that my library had participated in the Iowa City Pride Parade, so it felt like a great year to introduce a bigger inclusive program of this nature," Redington explained.

The event was a success with over 150 people attending to hear rhymes, stories and songs being performed by several members of the drag community.

"The families had an opportunity to ask the Drag queens and king questions about drag, pride and what everyone can do to foster love and acceptance in our community," Redington said. "There were many moments of laughter and emotion ... I experienced an overwhelming sense of joy that I won't forget."
